Debby Figoni

Debby Figoni has been working in the environmental field for sixteen years (or her whole life - depending on how you look at it). For twelve years, she worked on recycling, hazardous waste and composting programs in the Bay Area enthusiastically educating students, residents, businesses, coworkers and friends to respect our valuable resources through conservation.

When Debby moved to the Inland Empire and saw the excessive amount of water waste, she immediately got involved with water conservation. In 2007, she became a Master Gardener so she could personally redo her landscape with drought tolerant plants and was IEUA's first cash for grass applicant. She has worked for the City of San Dimas on water pollution programs and for the City of Ontario on water conservation and recycling programs.

Debby has been one of CBWCD's biggest advocates, promoting the demonstration garden through the Master Gardener's Harmony in the Garden Workshops. As the CBWCD's newest Conservation Specialist her main function will be in assisting with the development of the new school education building and program. In addition, Debby will be helping to expand and promote CBWCD's various residential and professional landscape and irrigation programs.
